OLD DOMINION FOUNDATION was established on December 1, 1941, by Paul Mellon, of Upperville, Virginia. The Foundation is incorporated as a nonprofit organization under the laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia. The main office of the Foundation, originally in Washington, D.C., has since 1951 been in New York City.

The establishment of the Foundation preceded by only a few days the entry of the United States into World War II, and during the first four years of the Foundation's existence its available funds were devoted chiefly to war relief and similar activities. As the Foundation's program developed following the war, it has been concerned largely with the humanities and liberal education, the arts, mental health, and conservation. A special program has been maintained in the Commonwealth of Virginia.

During the period of twenty-five years from its establishment late in 1941 through the year 1966, the Foundation appropriated $77,220,954 for philanthropic purposes. Its income during this period was $32,131,113.

This report contains brief descriptions of some of the larger appropriations, followed by a complete list of all appropriations made and grants paid during the period, together with relevant financial statements.

Education

The support given by Old Dominion Foundation to education has been largely for the humanities and for liberal arts teaching programs. In an era marked by the achievements of experimental science and technology, education has become increasingly specialized and professional. Financial support, both public and private, has been more readily available for scientific research and technical training than for the humanities and for programs of general education. To help remedy this imbalance, Old Dominion Foundation has made a number of grants intended to strengthen liberal arts teaching and the role of the humanities in the curriculum, and it has supported programs designed to cross the boundaries between the disciplines and to promote broad understanding rather than technical competence.

Yale University

In 1952 the Foundation made a grant of $5,000,000 to Yale University for the development of a program of general education emphasizing small discussion groups. A major feature of the plan was the Program of Directed Studies in the Liberal Arts and Sciences, a special course of study for selected freshmen and sophomores that employs a largely prescribed curriculum, seminar teaching, and philosophy courses designed to analyze and relate the materials and methods of the other courses. The program was an attempt to re-create the community of intellectual experience that characterized the older classical curriculum and, by encouraging active discussion of a common body of material, to promote the maximum engagement by each student in his own education and that of his fellow students.

The grant also inaugurated a teaching role for the University's residential Colleges by establishing seminar courses for sophomores within the Colleges. In addition, it provided further tutorial instruction for juniors and seniors in the divisional programs, which offer broader programs of study than the departmental courses, and support for the "Scholars of the House" program, under which a limited number of seniors do individual work without course requirements.

In 1958 the Foundation made a grant to Yale University of $15,000,000 as a further step in strengthening the educational role of the University's residential college system. By dividing a large student body into small groups, the residential colleges enable a large university to enjoy many of the advantages of a small liberal arts college. Students have the opportunity to know the faculty members who are attached to the colleges as Fellows, to become actively involved in the affairs of their college, and to educate themselves and one another in the process. The educational potential of the colleges, both formal and informal, was increased by the Foundation's grant, which provided for the construction of two new colleges—Morse College and Ezra Stiles College—and for a large expansion of the instructional program throughout all the colleges by the establishment of additional seminars, the creation of the position of Assistant Master in each college, and the enlargement of college library collections.

St. John's College

A distinctive program of liberal education which the Foundation has supported with substantial grants over a period of years is that of St. John's College, Annapolis, Maryland. The basic assumption of the St. John's program is that the liberal arts college, as distinct from the technical or professional school, should devote itself to cultivating the imagination and the intellectual powers and broadening the understanding of its students rather than to training specialists; and that the best method of accomplishing this objective is to expose students to a common curriculum based on outstanding books of the Western tradition and to the discipline of the liberal arts. Seminars on the books are accompanied by intensive tutorials in mathematics and languages and laboratory exercises in the natural sciences, more than forty percent of the curriculum being devoted to science and mathematics. The faculty is without departments. The goal is an intellectual community in which learning is a continuous and spontaneous activity.

The Foundation's grants to St. John's College total over $7,000,000.

Center for Hellenic Studies

The advancement of research and teaching in one area of the humanities—classical Greek culture and the Hellenic tradition—was the purpose of grants totaling over $5,000,000 made by the Foundation to Harvard University in 1960 and 1963 for the establishment in Washington, D.C., of an interuniversity Center for Hellenic Studies. A number of Junior Fellows, from the United States and abroad, study and write at the Center on one-year fellowship appointments under the supervision of its resident director, Dr. Bernard M. W. Knox of Harvard University. They are chosen by a group of Senior Fellows, who are members of the faculties of leading American universities and who visit the Center for meetings with the Juniors, as do other visiting scholars. The Senior Fellows to date have been Professors Gerald F. Else, University of Michigan; John H. Finley, Harvard University; Eric A. Havelock, Yale University; Henry R. Immerwahr, University of North Carolina; Richmond Lattimore, Bryn Mawr College; Whitney J. Oates, Princeton University; James H. Oliver, The Johns Hopkins University; and Dr. Knox, who was a member of the Yale faculty before becoming the Center's director.

An important part of the Center's program will be the publication of a series of books, the first of which, "Theocritus' Coan Pastorals," by Gilbert Lawall, was recently published.

Endowments for the Humanities

The Foundation has established a number of endowed professorships, funds, and fellowships in the humanities.

Princeton University in 1962 received $500,000 to endow a senior fellowship in its Council of the Humanities. The Council was established to support teaching and research in the humanities and better communication among the disciplines. It is governed by a committee on which all the disciplines are represented. The Council offers to outstanding individuals, from within and without the University, opportunities for research and writing in the humanities and for such matters as the development of new courses and interdepartmental programs. The aim is not only to advance knowledge but also to broaden the humanistic understanding of the participating scholars and to strengthen liberal arts teaching in the University.

Vassar College received a grant of $1,000,000 in 1961 to endow the Mary Conover Mellon Chairs in Art and in Music, and Cornell University received $500,000 in 1964 for the endowment of a professorship in the humanities.

Grants made by the Foundation in 1961 and 1964 established endowments of $500,000 each at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and California Institute of Technology for the purpose of strengthening the role of the humanities in the training of scientists and engineers. The income of the endowments is used by the two institutions to enlarge the opportunities for research and independent study by their young faculty members teaching in the humanities, thereby strengthening the humanities faculties and programs of two of our leading technical institutions.

Liberal Arts Colleges

In 1965 and 1966 the Foundation made grants of $50,000 each to twenty-three independent liberal arts colleges to enable them to increase the salaries of some of their senior faculty members. The purpose was to strengthen teaching in institutions where teaching is emphasized but whose ablest teachers are often tempted to join universities where salaries are higher and research opportunities greater. The grants were to be expended over a period of not more than five years to increase the salaries of a limited number of the most valued senior faculty members, to be selected by the colleges themselves. The recipients were Bowdoin College and Colby College in Maine, Middlebury College in Vermont, Mount Holyoke College in Massachusetts, Connecticut College in Connecticut, St. Lawrence University, Hamilton College, and Wells College in New York, Allegheny College and Franklin and Marshall College in Pennsylvania, Goucher College in Maryland, Davidson College in North Carolina, University of the South in Tennessee, Antioch College, Kenyon College, and College of Wooster in Ohio, Knox College in Illinois, Grinnell College in Iowa, Beloit College and Lawrence University in Wisconsin, Carleton College in Minnesota, and Mills College and Pomona College in California.

In 1966 the Foundation made grants to two leading independent liberal arts colleges, Swarthmore College and Haverford College, to strengthen their teaching programs in the humanities by giving their humanities faculties greater opportunities for research and independent study. In the case of each college the grant provided a fund, expendable over a period of approximately five years, to provide fellowships to selected teachers in the humanities for research and writing, study at major universities, travel abroad, the development of new courses or teaching programs, and other activities important to the teachers' intellectual development and refreshment and to the enrichment of their teaching. A limited portion of the funds may be used, in the discretion of the colleges, to bring in visiting professors in the humanities for the purpose of offering new courses and outside stimulation.

Libraries

The Foundation has made grants for library development totaling some $3,800,000.

Grants made to Yale University in 1949 and later years enabled th University Library to acquire and edit the private papers of James Boswell, an extensive collection of eighteenth-century material now in course of publication in both a trade and a research edition.

Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut, received grants in 1950 and 1951 for the construction of a new library building, a primary purpose of the gift being to enable the College to acquire and make available to scholars a valuable research collection, the Watkinson Library of Reference. In 1965 the Foundation made a further grant to Trinity College for the improvement of its Library.

The Foundation has also assisted in developing the libraries of Marlboro College and The Experiment in International Living in Vermont, Bank Street College of Education in New York City, the University of the West Indies at its Centre in Antigua, and Athens College in Greece. A number of libraries at liberal arts colleges in the Virginia area received grants to strengthen their collections in the humanities.

In 1955 and 1956, through the American Library Association, the Foundation donated sets of "Great Books of the Western World" to some 1,600 libraries throughout the United States selected by a committee of the Association.

Recently the Foundation has supported exploration of the role that modern technology, especially computers, can play in the improvement of library services. Grants for this purpose made to the American Association of Research Libraries, Washington, D.C., and to The British Museum and Brasenose College, Oxford University, in England, supported conferences and studies in which representatives of American and British libraries and other interested institutions participated.

General Education outside the Universities

Through grants totaling over $1,000,000, the Foundation has assisted several programs, conducted outside of the colleges and universities, that are intended to promote the discussion and understanding of basic issues of importance to the individual, whether professional or layman, who wishes to continue his general education and broaden his horizons.

The Institute for Philosophical Research, of which the Foundation has been a principal supporter since its founding in 1952, was established to analyze Western thought on subjects of continuing philosophical interest from ancient Greece to the present day, with the purpose of clarifying their meaning and facilitating their discussion by both professional philosophers and laymen. The Institute, under the direction of Dr. Mortimer J. Adler, has published a comprehensive study, "The Idea of Freedom," and is preparing analyses of other important concepts.

The Foundation has made a number of grants to The Great Books Foundation, which promotes the reading and discussion by community and school groups throughout the country of outstanding books of the Western tradition, and to the American Foundation for Continuing Education (earlier known as the American Foundation for Political Education), which conducts somewhat similar programs.

The Foundation has also assisted the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, Aspen, Colorado, to carry on its Executive Seminars, which provide an opportunity for leaders in the fields of business, labor, education, religion, politics, and the arts to discuss, under trained leadership, ideas and issues which tend to extend the horizons of the specialist.

Educational Television

During the 1950's, the Foundation assisted the Joint Council Educational Television in its efforts to set aside and develop channels educational television. Subsequently the Foundation assisted the Metropolitan Educational Television Association, which was chartered by the New York State Board of Regents to draw on the educational and cultural resources of the New York area in the production of television programs. Later the Foundation assisted in the development of the Educational Broadcasting Corporation, which was created to operate New York City's first educational television station, WNDT (Channel 13). More recently the Foundation has aided the Educational Broadcasting Corporation in the production of programs in education and the arts. The total of the Foundation's grants in this field is approximately $333,000.

International Education and Foreign Study Programs

The Foundation has made grants totaling over $1,000,000 in support of programs involving student exchange and study abroad.

For many years the Foundation has supported a program of exchange fellowships between Yale University and Clare College, Cambridge, England. The fellowships, of two years' duration, are offered yearly to two graduating students at each institution.

In 1964 the Foundation made a grant of $200,000 to Clare College to endow fellowships at Clare Hall, a Centre for Advanced Scholars recently established to expand the opportunities for research and advanced study available to members of Cambridge University and to visiting scholars.

The Atlantic Council of the United States received a grant in 1965 for scholarships to enable American boys to attend Atlantic College, the international school established in 1962 at St. Donat's Castle in South Wales.

In 1964 the Foundation made a grant of $250,000 to the Institute of International Education to enable the Institute to open a new office in Paris in order to meet more effectively its increasing responsibilities for educational exchange between the United States and the countries of the Atlantic community.

The Foundation was an early supporter of the Salzburg Seminar in American Studies, in Austria. Established in 1947 and staffed by visiting American teachers, the Salzburg Seminar was the first educational center in Europe devoted to a broad study of the civilization of the United States designed to give Europeans a better understanding of American institutions and thought. The Foundation also for a number of years contributed substantially to the Harvard International Seminar, which brings to the United States for a two-month period individuals from both European and non-European countries between the ages of twenty-five and forty who are in positions of leadership in their own countries or who seem likely to achieve such positions.

Through grants to the International Council for Christian Leadership, the Foundation has given assistance to the work carried on at Burg Liebenzell, in the Schwarzwald, Germany, where young people of many nationalities work and study together with the aim of developing international understanding and democratic ideals.

In 1964 the Foundation made a grant to the American Academy in Rome to strengthen its program of fellowships for young American artists and scholars, and a grant to Harvard University to support for a five-year period a fellowship at its Center for Italian Renaissance Culture at I Tatti, the late Bernard Berenson's villa near Florence. Stanford University received assistance, through grants for fellowships and a basic library, in establishing the Intercollegiate Center for Classical Studies in Rome, of which some seventeen participating colleges and universities are members.

Outward Bound Schools

During the years 1952–1955 Old Dominion Foundation made grants to the American-British Foundation for European Education to assist in strengthening democratic elements in the education of German youth through scholarships to Salem School and other German independent schools and through the establishment in Germany of so-called "short term" schools, the first of which, Schloss Weissenhaus, was opened in 1952. Schools of the latter type, modeled on those developed in Great Britain by the Outward Bound Trust and often known as Outward Bound Schools, offer young men between the ages of sixteen and twenty-four an opportunity to develop self-reliance and a sense of service to others through short courses involving challenging experiences such as mountain climbing and rescue work.

A grant by Old Dominion Foundation to the Atlantic Foundation for the Education of the Free in 1962 helped to establish the first school of this type in the United States, the Colorado Outward Bound School at Marble, Colorado. Subsequent grants by Old Dominion Foundation made possible the establishment of three additional Outward Bound Schools, in Minnesota, in Maine, and in Oregon.

Other Educational Grants

Over a period of years the Foundation has made grants totaling $347,000 to the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students in support of programs to improve the educational opportunities of promising members of deprived groups. Among these programs were the Community Talent Search Project developed in New York City for the early identification and encouragement of deprived children capable of higher education, and the College Assistance Program under which college admission officers visit high schools in underprivileged areas to locate prospective college students. The Foundation's grants have been used for the operating expenses of these programs and for scholarships.

Other recipients of grants in the field of education include The Johns Hopkins University for its School of Advanced International Studies; Columbia University for its Oral History Research Office; The Asia Society for its program of exhibitions and related educational activities dealing with the visual arts of Asia; Yale-in-China Association for the development of teaching and research programs at the new Chinese University of Hong Kong; the Association of American Colleges for general support and for the development of summer workshops in non-Western studies for college administrators and faculty members; the Council for Basic Education for a number of studies, including the evaluation of textbooks and other teaching materials used in English courses in American high schools; and the College Entrance Examination Board for institutes held by its Commission on English to improve high-school English curriculums and the training of high-school teachers of English.

Bollingen Program

Prior to the establishment of Bollingen Foundation in December 1945, Old Dominion Foundation supported, on a limited scale, the program of book publication (Bollingen Series), grants, and fellowships which later became the program of Bollingen Foundation.

The Arts

The Foundation has supported programs of education, research, and publication in the fine arts, and a number of projects in the performing arts.

Since 1952, through grants to the National Gallery of Art, Washington, D.C., Old Dominion Foundation, together with Avalon Foundation, has supported the A. W. Mellon Lectures in the Fine Arts. These lectures, delivered annually by scholars in various disciplines, are published by Bollingen Foundation in Bollingen Series.

Old Dominion Foundation and Avalon Foundation have also supported, through grants to the National Gallery of Art, a research program conducted by the Mellon Institute (now the Carnegie-Mellon University) in Pittsburgh to develop new materials and techniques for use in the fine arts, a project which to date has been largely concerned with improved methods for the preservation of oil paintings. In the same field, the Foundation in 1965 made a grant to New York University in support of a program developed by the University's Institute of Fine Arts, comprising research in the preservation of art objects and the training of graduate students in conservation methods.

Through grants to the National Gallery of Art and the Print Council of America, Old Dominion Foundation and Avalon Foundation have established fellowships for the training of museum curators and curators of graphic arts. The fellowships are known, respectively, as the David E. Finley Fellowships and the Paul J. Sachs Fellowships.

Through grants to The Paul Mellon Foundation for British Art, which was established in 1962, Old Dominion Foundation has undertaken the support of a project of research and publication to advance knowledge of British painting, sculpture, and graphic arts. The project, under the direction of Mr. Basil Taylor, will sponsor a series of books under the general title "Studies in British Art," of which three volumes have been published: "Marcellus Laroon," by Robert Raines; "Zoffany and his Tribuna," by Oliver Millar; and "Holbein and Henry VIII," by Roy Strong.

Two museums in New York City, The Museum of Modern Art and the Whitney Museum of American Art, received grants of $250,000 each as endowments for their publication programs, to enable these institutions to make publications of high quality available at reasonable prices to scholars and the general reader.

The American Federation of Arts received assistance in expanding its program of traveling exhibitions, through which works of art are loaned at a reasonable fee to museums, art centers, universities, and schools throughout the United States; and the International Council of the Museum of Modern Art received help for its "Art in Embassies" project, through which loan collections, mostly of American art, are assembled and shipped for installation in American embassy residences abroad.

The Foundation has also assisted the Skowhegan School of Painting and Sculpture, in Maine, which offers professional training to talented young painters and sculptors, and the Institute of Contemporary Arts, Washington, D.C., which offers a varied program of lectures, seminars, exhibitions, and other activities in various fields of the arts on a national and international level.

In support of the performing arts, the Foundation contributed to the building of two centers of national significance: Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts in New York City and the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C.

In 1965 the Foundation made a three-year grant to The Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center to assist it in meeting its operating expenses during the early stages of its development. The City Center of Music and Drama has also received assistance, particularly for the commissioning of new productions by The New York City Ballet, which performs at Lincoln Center.

The Foundation has made substantial grants to a number of other theater projects in the New York metropolitan area. It was a major contributor to the development of the New York Shakespeare Festival, which offers free performances of Shakespearean drama and other presentations in New York City, and the American Shakespeare Festival Theatre and Academy at Stratford, Connecticut. The Foundation also contributed to the establishment of Theatre in Education, a program which presents scenes from Shakespeare to high-school audiences.

Since 1959 the Foundation has helped support Theatre, Incorporated, which operates the APA-Phoenix repertory program in New York City, and the Foundation has made several grants to the Washington Drama Society, which operates Arena Stage in Washington.

Through grants to The American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA), the Foundation has assisted the National Repertory Theatre, which tours major cities of the United States under ANTA's sponsorship.

The Saratoga Performing Arts Center received a grant in 1965 toward the cost of its new amphitheater.

Grants to Young Audiences, Inc., have aided the expansion of a program which introduces young people to good music through concerts by professional musicians, presented at school assemblies and community centers in areas where music of high quality is not ordinarily performed.

Mental Health

Old Dominion Foundation's grants in the field of mental health have been largely in support of programs for the training of psychiatrists and members of other professions whose work is likely to benefit from an understanding of the insights that psychiatry can provide. The Foundation has also given major support to two programs concerned with the psychological development and mental health of college students.

Programs for training psychiatrists have been supported by grants to The Menninger Foundation, Topeka, Kansas; the Austen Riggs Center, Stockbridge, Massachusetts; The Institute of Living, Hartford, Connecticut; and The Institute for Psychoanalysis, Chicago. Through grants to The Anna Freud Foundation, scholarships have been provided for the training of child therapists at The Hampstead Child-Therapy Course and Clinic, in London. Substantial assistance has also been given to The Tavistock Institute of Human Relations, London, which emphasizes psychiatrically oriented preventive work, in large part by imparting to groups in other professions some of the special knowledge and skills possessed by the psychiatrist.

Two grants made by the Foundation in 1955 helped establish programs which explore the relations of psychiatry and religion and the role psychiatry can play in the training of clergymen. In that year, the Foundation made the first of several grants to Union Theological Seminary for the introduction of a program in psychiatry and religion intended to strengthen the training of clergymen by introducing them to the understanding of human nature and behavior offered by contemporary psychodynamics. The program combines classroom instruction with supervised practical experience, and encouragement is given to continuous interchange of thought between psychiatrists and theologians with a view to developing a deeper understanding of what each discipline can contribute to the other.

A generally similar purpose underlay grants made by the Foundation between 1955 and 1962 to help establish the Academy of Religion and Mental Health, which explores areas of mutual concern to the clergyman and the psychiatrist and the role of psychiatry in the training of the clergyman and in the work of the pastoral counselor.

Programs concerned with the mental health and psychological development of college students were supported by grants of approximately $2,000,000 each which the Foundation made to Yale University and to Vassar College in 1949.

The grant to Yale expanded and strengthened a program, established by the Division of Psychiatry and Mental Hygiene of the University Department of Health, which makes counseling and psychiatric help available to the student body. The program includes research on the characteristics and problems of student-age groups and offers training to psychiatrists and others concerned with that field.

The grant to Vassar established the Mary Conover Mellon Fund for the Advancement of Education. The major objective of the Fund has been to attempt to identify and strengthen those elements in the college experience that foster the growth of psychological maturity. The income of the Fund has been used to provide psychiatric consulting services for students, to establish a system of house fellowships under which faculty members live in the student residential houses, and to carry out a number of studies designed to analyze the effect on students of various aspects of the college environment.

Other grants by Old Dominion Foundation in the mental health field have gone to Fountain House Foundation, New York City, to enable it more effectively to carry on its program of psychiatric rehabilitation for those discharged from mental hospitals; to the Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry for its publication program; to the Mental Health Materials Center, which collects, evaluates, and disseminates authoritative material on mental health; and to The National Association for Mental Health and the World Federation for Mental Health.

Conservation

In the late 1940's, Old Dominion Foundation became interested in the developing field of conservation. Over the years the Foundation has contributed substantially to conservation programs and organizations of two types: those concerned with increasing man's understanding of his natural environment, his relationship to it, and the effects of his activities upon it; and those engaged in preserving particularly valuable portions of it.

An organization of the first type to which Old Dominion Foundation has been a major contributor is The Conservation Foundation, which was established in 1948 to sponsor research and educational programs to increase man's understanding of his environment and the wise use of natural resources, to serve as a clearinghouse for information in the conservation field, and to direct attention to the ecological point of view in connection with those of man's activities which radically alter his natural environment. Old Dominion Foundation's grants to The Conservation Foundation, totaling over $1,000,000, have provided both general support for this overall program and assistance to a number of special research and educational programs which The Conservation Foundation has sponsored. These programs have included studies of laws relating to the use of natural resources, investigations of water resource management, the development of graduate teaching programs in the management of natural resources, the establishment of an Alaska Research Center, an analysis of the content and effectiveness of conservation education in the schools, the production of films and other teaching materials on ecology, and a study of the National Parks of the United States to determine how they can best serve the increasing recreational needs of a growing population without destruction of the unique qualities which they were created to preserve.

Other organizations which Old Dominion Foundation has assisted in connection with programs of conservation education are the National Audubon Society and the New York Zoological Society.

The second aspect of conservation in which Old Dominion Foundation has been especially interested—the preservation of natural areas —has been advanced through assistance both to governmental units engaged in acquiring large areas for public recreation and to private conservation groups interested in acquiring smaller areas that provide recreational opportunities on a more modest scale or are important for wildlife preservation, for scientific research, or for other reasons.

Grants made to the National Park Service of the United States Department of the Interior by Old Dominion Foundation and Avalon Foundation in 1952 and 1957, together with funds provided by the State of North Carolina, enabled the Park Service to acquire the land for the establishment of the Cape Hatteras National Seashore, in North Carolina, the first national seashore recreational area in the United State Recent grants by these two Foundations to the State of North Caroli have aided in the expansion of this seashore area through the creation c the Cape Lookout National Seashore, extending south from Hatteras.

During 1956–1959 Old Dominion Foundation and Avalon Foundation financed surveys of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, the Pacific coast, and the Great Lakes area, carried out by the National Park Service, for the purpose of identifying other areas worthy of preservation as national parks or recreational areas. Old Dominion Foundation also financed studies of the feasibility of establishing the recreational area which is now the Cape Cod National Seashore.

In 1965 Old Dominion Foundation made a grant to the National Park Service for the development and execution of plans for the rehabilitation of Lafayette Park in Washington, D.C., as part of a program to enhance the architectural distinction and the beauty of the national capital.

The Foundation's grants to the National Park Service have totaled $1,138,890.

While the federal government in recent years has assumed the major responsibility for financing the acquisition of the large areas suitable for national parks, private organizations continue to play a major role in preserving many smaller areas, including those that have special values not directly related to large-scale recreation. In the 1950's, Old Dominion Foundation began to contribute to such newly established organizations as The Nature Conservancy and Wildlife Preserves in support of their efforts to preserve some of the remaining natural areas of unusual quality in the New York metropolitan region, including Mettler's Woods (now known as the William L. Hutcheson Memorial Forest), a primeval hardwood stand in New Jersey; a portion of the Passaic River valley in New Jersey; Mianus River Gorge in Westchester County, New York; and the ancient holly forest known as the "Sunken Forest" on Fire Island, New York, now a part of the Fire Island National Seashore. A 1954 grant to the National Audubon Society aided in the establishment of Corkscrew Swamp Sanctuary, in Florida, containing the world's greatest remaining stand of bald cypress trees and a noted bird-nesting site; and in 1958 the Foundation assisted the Massachusetts Audubon Society in acquiring the Wellfleet Bay Wildlife Sanctuary on Cape Cod.

Old Dominion Foundation has been the largest contributor to the development of The Nature Conservancy, which was established about fifteen years ago by members of the Ecological Society of America who understood the urgency of preserving for scientific study important biotic communities that were threatened with extinction. The Conservancy has extended its interest to include areas of outstanding aesthetic or recreational significance and has developed a nationwide program of land acquisition through financial assistance, largely in the form of loans, which it extends to local groups—including Nature Conservancy chapters, other private groups, and governmental agencies —that are engaged in acquiring natural areas. Old Dominion Foundation's grants to The Nature Conservancy, largely for its Matching and Loan Fund for land acquisition, have totaled $836,694.

The preservation of natural areas near metropolitan centers and the development of conservation education programs are both involved in grants which the Foundation has made to the Nature Centers Division of the National Audubon Society (which developed from Nature Centers for Young America, formerly the National Foundation for Junior Museums), and to Natural Science for Youth Foundation. These organizations provide guidance to local communities in the acquisition of open land and the attendant development of interpretive centers and outdoor educational programs, particularly for young people.

To promote the preservation of some of the rapidly diminishing supply of open space needed for recreation in the densely populated New York metropolitan area—comprising portions of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut—Old Dominion Foundation in 1957 made a grant to the Regional Plan Association for a study of the area's recreational needs and the remaining opportunities for satisfying them. The results of the study were published under the titles "The Law of Open Space," "The Dynamics of Park Demand," "Nature in the Metropolis," and "The Race for Open Space."

The Foundation has also assisted the Open Space Action Committee, which was organized by the Natural Area Council in 1963 to carry out the recommendations of the Regional Plan Association's study by identifying specific areas in the New York metropolitan area that remain undeveloped and by attempting to arrange for their preservation as open space for recreation or similar uses.

In 1966 the Foundation made a grant to the Regional Plan Association for a survey to define the dimensions of another growing problem in the New York metropolitan region—the effect of air and water pollution and waste disposal on the quality of the environment.

The Foundation provided for the establishment of an environmental science center for conservation education and related purposes within New York City through a grant to Wave Hill, Incorporated, which will operate its program on land that the City has acquired on the Hudson River, in Riverdale, consisting of part of the former Perkins-Freeman Estate and the adjoining Park-along-the-Hudson.

Old Dominion Foundation has also been interested in conservation activities outside of the United States. It has been one of the principal supporters of the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources, an organization made up of both governmental and private members, which is concerned with the establishment of parks and natural areas and with the preservation of wildlife throughout the world. In one area noted for its wildlife, East Africa, the Foundation has contributed to the establishment of national parks and programs of conservation education and research through grants to the African Wildlife Leadership Foundation. These grants assisted in creating Africa's first wildlife management school at Mweka, Tanzania, and an educational center at the Nairobi National Park in Kenya which provides Africans with the opportunity, now largely lacking, of becoming familiar with their vast wildlife resources and with the importance of preserving them. Another grant contributed to the establishment of the Serengeti Research Institute, a research facility in a noted wildlife area in Tanzania. A grant to the Tanzania National Parks in 1964 helped establish the new Ruaha National Park, in central Tanzania, covering a 5,000-square-mile area rich in wildlife.

Population Programs

An important factor in the problem of conserving natural resources, en space, and a favorable environment is the rapid increase in the orld's population. To help provide more widespread understanding the population question, the Foundation for some years has been one of the principal contributors to the Population Reference Bureau, which gathers, interprets, and disseminates information on population trends. The Foundation has also contributed to Planned Parenthood Federation of America in support of programs of research and the dissemination of interpretive data on population trends and their effect on human society and resources.

The American Friends Service Committee has recently received help from the Foundation for a family planning program in Latin America.

Historic Preservation

Conservation of a different sort was involved in a number of grants which Old Dominion Foundation has made for the preservation of sites and buildings significant in American history and culture. Except for grants made to Historic Annapolis, Inc. in support of its program of preservation and restoration of historic sections of that city, the specific projects which the Foundation has aided in this field have been largely in the Commonwealth of Virginia and are described elsewhere in this report.

As a part of this effort, the Foundation has given substantial support to the National Trust for Historic Preservation in the United States, which was chartered by Congress in 1949 to provide leadership and expert advice in this field. To provide permanent support for the basic work of the National Trust, Old Dominion Foundation in 1957 made a grant of $1,250,000, which, together with a similar grant by Avalon Foundation, established a fund of $2,500,000 as endowment for the headquarters operations of the organization.

The Foundation has discontinued support of individual projects for the preservation and restoration of historic sites and buildings.

Projects in the Commonwealth of Virginia

For many years Old Dominion Foundation has maintained a special program in Virginia, the state of the founder's residence and of the Foundation's incorporation. The Virginia program has touched on some fields of activity not included in the Foundation's general program. A representative selection of the Foundation's grants in the Commonwealth follows.

Education

Old Dominion Foundation has been a major supporter of the Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges, which solicits funds from business and industry for the support of faculty salaries and other instructional costs at the twelve four-year independent colleges which are its members. Old Dominion Foundation's grants, totaling $445,000, have defrayed a large part of the operating expenses of the Virginia Foundation, enabling almost the entire sum raised by that organization to be applied to the support of its member colleges.

Between 1954 and 1959, Old Dominion Foundation made a series of grants to the University Center in Virginia, Richmond, which was organized for the purpose of seeking cooperative solutions to certain common needs of its member colleges, which now number twenty-six. The Foundation's grants have supported a variety of projects ranging from cooperative library planning to visiting scholar programs.

Individual educational institutions which have received grants totaling $257,400 for special projects include Hampton Institute, for the development of its Continuing Education Center and in support of an advanced placement program in three high schools in the Hampton area; Virginia Union University, to assist in developing a new laboratory-classroom facility; Old Dominion College, for the development of its Fine Arts Department; and Saint Paul's College, for the improvement of faculty salaries. The grants to Hampton Institute, Virginia Union University, and Old Dominion College also provided for the strengthening of library resources, particularly in the humanities.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia received $250,000 as an endowment for faculty salaries and $155,000 for assistance in building a refectory.

With the assistance of a grant of $200,000 from Old Dominion Foundation, the Virginia Historical Society added a new wing to Battle Abbey, an historic structure in Richmond, to serve as the Society's headquarters and to provide space for the Society's research library. The Foundation has also assisted the Society's publication program. The George C. Marshall Research Foundation, Lexington, received $50,000 for library development.

Virginia Polytechnic Institute received grants totaling $1,737,512 for a number of projects, including the construction of the Carol M. Newman Library in Blacksburg, the establishment of a Continuing Education Center, experimentation in the use of radio and television for educational purposes, and experimental agricultural programs at its Northern Virginia Pasture Research Station.

In 1961 the Foundation contributed $50,000 to the Greater Washington Educational Television Association, which serves the northern Virginia area, toward its initial expenses in inaugurating educational programs, and in 1963 the Foundation gave $100,000 to Central Virginia Educational Television Corporation to assist in the establishment of an educational television station in Richmond.

A grant of $180,000 made in 1965 to the University of Virginia and to Yale University inaugurated the Old Dominion Foundation Fellowship Program, under which selected teachers and administrators from public high schools in Virginia are afforded an opportunity for intellectual growth and stimulation through study in the humanities at the two participating Universities. Under the program, four teachers annually attend Yale for a full academic year, and a group of about sixty teachers and administrators participate in a four-week summer session at the University of Virginia.

The Arts

Over the years Old Dominion Foundation has given substantial assistance to the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, in Richmond. In 1950 the Foundation made a grant of $250,000 to the Museum to assist it in new construction designed to provide more adequate space for its collections and to enable the Museum to expand such services to the people of Virginia as its program of traveling exhibits. A further grant of $650,000 in 1954 enabled the Museum to build a theater wing for the performing arts. A grant made in 1960 made it possible for the Museum to acquire an "artmobile"—a small, self-contained museum on wheels which travels throughout the Commonwealth bringing original works of art to many people far from Richmond.

Beginning in 1946, the Foundation has made contributions totaling $186,000 to the Barter Theatre, in Abingdon, The State Theatre of Virginia, one of the earliest and best known of America's regional professional theaters.

The Foundation contributed toward the cost of a new building erected by the Lynchburg Fine Arts Center in 1962.

Conservation

With the cooperation of the Virginia Department of Conservation and Economic Development, the Foundation in 1960 provided the initiative and funds for the establishment of the Virginia Natural Areas System. The objective was to preserve, for recreational and other uses, a number of relatively small units of wild land throughout the Commonwealth distinguished by their unspoiled beauty or ecological significance. The Foundation's initial grants under this program, made to the Commonwealth of Virginia, The Nature Conservancy, and Philadelphia Conservationists, financed the purchase of three areas, which were turned over to the Commonwealth to become the first units of the System. Later the Foundation added additional units. It is hoped that assistance from private donors and state funds will continue to provide for the acquisition from time to time of primitive tracts for addition to the Natural Areas System.

or and interior views

In 1964 the Foundation made a grant to the Commonwealth for the use of the Department of Conservation and Economic Development in acquiring wilderness lands at Mount Rogers for a new state park. The Foundation has made other grants to this Department from time to time for the purpose of strengthening the state park system.

The Boy Scouts of America, National Capital Area Council, received a grant in 1963 to help in the acquisition of land for a wilderness camp at Goshen Pass, Virginia.

In support of education in forestry, grants by Old Dominion Foundation were instrumental in the establishment of the Virginia Forests Educational Fund of Virginia Forests, Inc., and in the establishment of scholarships for study by foresters sponsored by the Virginia Division of Forestry of the Commonwealth's Department of Conservation and Economic Development.

Historic Preservation

In earlier years Old Dominion Foundation assisted in the preservation and restoration of historic sites and buildings in Virginia.

Grants totaling $300,000 paid to Woodlawn Public Foundation and to the National Trust for Historic Preservation between 1948 and 1954 assisted in the acquisition and restoration of Woodlawn Plantation, near Mount Vernon, which is maintained by the National Trust as a historic museum.

Historic St. Luke's Restoration received assistance in the restoration of St. Luke's Church, at Smithfield, the oldest Protestant church in the Commonwealth. A grant to the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities provided funds for essential repairs to Merchants Hope Church, a seventeenth-century building in the Tidewater section, and a grant to the National Council, Episcopal Church helped in the renovation of the old Jamestown Church in preparation for the celebration in 1957 of the 350th anniversary of the establishment of Jamestown Colony. A grant to the Pohick Church, of Lorton, assisted the congregation in erecting a parish house designed to harmonize with the old church building.

Health and Medicine

For a number of years the Foundation has contributed to the Virginia Council on Health and Medical Care, in large part in support of the Council's Health Careers Program under which personnel are recruited for service in various medical and health programs. The Foundation has also contributed some $197,000 to the Loudoun-Fauquier Health Center, Middleburg, a regional center furnishing medical services to a rural community.

In 1962 the Foundation made a grant of $250,000 to the Woodrow Wilson Rehabilitation Center, Fisherville, an agency of the Commonwealth which has pioneered in the development of new techniques for the training of the physically and mentally handicapped. The Virginia Society for Crippled Children and Adults received $35,000 toward the construction of a summer camp and treatment center.

The Medical College of Virginia has received grants totaling about $116,000 for the study of teaching procedures in its School of Medicine, for the support of a clinical training program in its Chaplains' Department, and for a noncredit course in the humanities for medical students.

Other Grants

In 1954 the Foundation financed a comprehensive survey of the Commonwealth by Dr. Jean Gottmann, a French geographer and member of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, New Jersey. The study, published under the title "Virginia at Mid-Century," was intended as an objective evaluation of the resources, problems, and potentialities of the State which might prove useful to those interested in its future.

In 1963, through a grant to the Brookings Institution, the Foundation supported a series of urban policy conferences held in Richmond, Norfolk, and Roanoke, with the purpose of assisting local leaders in municipal planning and policy making by exploring relevant aspects of current technological and economic developments.

PRICE WATERHOUSE & CO.

60 Broad Street
New York 10004
March 22, 1967

To the Board of Trustees of Old Dominion Foundation

In our opinion, the accompanying balance sheet, the related statements of income and expenses and principal account and the schedule of investment securities present fairly the financial position of Old Dominion Foundation at December 31, 1966, and, in the aggregate, its income, expenses and changes in principal account for the period from inception on December 1, 1941 to December 31, 1966 and the supplementary information on investment securities at December 31, 1966, in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles. Our examinations of the financial statements for the periods from inception through December 31, 1966, which were reported on separately by us, were made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards and accordingly included such tests of the accounting records and such other auditing procedures as we considered necessary in the circumstances.
